I bought this book for myself, I did not purchase the other book as my husband has recently become atheist. I have had struggles in my marriage since then so I bought this book to help work on myself. To help work on my love for my husband despite our major differences. It has, in a way, "forced" me to love him even on our bad days. This book can humble you, if you let it. I assume the Bethke's wrote this book with intentions of being a fun challenge for couples, but considering my situation this has instead left a different, but great impact on me. If your relationship is God based get this book, if one believes and the other doesn't, get this book, if you find it hard to love your husband, get the book. I don't think you'll regret it. This book will help you more than it will help him, as long as your not looking for anything in return.

My husband and I had a rough start with our marriage. We were teenagers, I was pregnant... that whole scenario. We simply didn't know how to love well. As we've grown up (both physically and spiritually) we've learned to grab ahold to the wisdom offered by others who are following after Christ and to apply it to our marriage. This book is one of those pieces of wisdom that we are grabbing on to! 10 years and 4 kids later, my husband and I love looking for ways to appreciate and serve each other. This book is gold for us. I recommend this book for any couple who is wanting to strengthen their relationship with their spouse and with Christ.

I've been finding love in a new relationship as a single mom post divorce...we are both divorced with young children and needing healing. This book has helped me immensely in reflecting Christ to my partner. It's not always easy, especially when you've been hurt in the past, but God is faithful and can redeem that which the locust has eaten.

I really like the journal format of this book. As you are completing each day, you can record it! What an awesome heirloom to pass on. :) We do some of these things already, but there are other things I haven't tried before, like writing down 10 things I love about my husband or creating a candy-gram. I'm looking forward to using this on a regular basis, and to eventually coming up with more creative ideas on my own. I think Alyssa did a great job with writing in an open, general fashion so it can apply to anyone who reads it.

This book is really good. There are a lot of cute and fun ideas to do for your significant other. While not all of them worked for us (hence the 4/5) most of them did and if anything it kept us focused on each other. Each day was something new to do for the other person and it's something that you can refer back to over time and pick random days to do again! My husband of course had the male version.

I purchased this version for myself and the "for her" version for my boyfriend. It has produced an amazing growth spurt for our relationship emotionally and spiritually. It shows new ways we can love on one another and areas where we need to do better as well. Definitely recommend this as wedding gifts for anyone too!

This book is very inspirational! Marriage is like a roller coaster but having your priorities in order makes things a bit simpler. That is what the book provides with words of God and Love!! I look forward to the next month taking this challenge and seeing what it holds for myself and my husband!

My husband and I have three little ones, all who are two and under. It can make for a hectic lifestyle where we focus so much on the kids and ourselves that we lose sight of each other. This book truly focuses your attention in fun and creative ways onto your spouse. After each day there are two full pages where you journal about your experience. I absolutely loved this aspect of the book. I am a journaler by nature and reflecting on the experience allows it to impact me on an even deeper level. Some of the best creative ideas in my opinion were: use a pick-up line on your husband (cheesy but so fun!), telling your spouse how you've seen them grow, and sending a picture of yourself holding up a sign that says, "Go
