I was so excited to get my copy of this! I haven't played piano in years but I remember how to read music and was able to work my way through several songs over the past couple of days. The arrangements are simple enough that someone with some musical background can get the hang of them pretty quickly, but complicated enough that they sound interesting. It's been so much fun playing Hamiltunes myself and I'm looking forward to going through the rest of the book.

Recommended!

Pretty dang easy, very satisfying to my intermediate-level children with Hamilaria. A beginning player will have to work to get the songs but could do it; an intermediate player can sight-read fairly easily. In some pieces, the repetitive whacking of one note for rapping "melody" line in right hand gets a little wearing to the listener (me) but is still fun for the piano player, according to reports from the childish ones. The more melodic songs are also represented here; clearly there was an attempt to choose melody-in-the-right-hand-friendly selections to include. Dear Theodosia, You'll Be Back,

Burn, and That Would Be Enough are very listener-pleasing. If you want to sing along and do the fast-paced songs and you have intermediate or better piano skills, get the Vocal Selections instead. You'll get the same songs with more complexity, but you will have to sing (or play melody instead of right hand accompaniment). If you just want to play the songs with melody in the right hand, this Easy Piano Selections is a great choice.

Love it! Though I should've thought about how many songs it was gonna have in the book, I'm not disappointed. Just wish it had, "What I'd Miss." Hopefully my school could have an actually Broadway show dedicated to Hamilton ;)

All I need is Lin Manuel Miranda to help me.

Bought it for my daughter. She's been practicing almost every day since she received it.

These selections are not "easy" ones. They are for advanced pianists. But if you like the music in Hamilton & enjoy playing the piano you will probably want this book.

What is there to say? Amazing and fun music!
