The Metropolitan Museum of Art is considered to be the largest encyclopedic museum in the world. This landmark book is the first to solely focus on the museum's greatest and best known paintings. This heavy volume illustrates approximately five hundred works from Europe, Asia, the United States, Africa (especially Ethiopia), Latin America, and Oceania dating from antiquity to today. In Kathryn Galitz's introductory essay, she stresses that paintings can come in many forms besides the usual notion of a flat two dimensional object. It is for this reason that she decided to include excellent examples of Egyptian coffin boxes, stone reliefs, Greek vases, Roman frescoes, ceramic vessels from pre-Columbian Peru and Mesoamerica, hand and hanging scrolls from China, Japan, and Korea, illuminated medieval manuscripts, album folios from India and the Middle East, Japanese folding screens, and tree bark paintings from Papau New Guinea and Australia. The artworks are then presented in four chapters- before 1450, from 1450 to 1750, from 1750 to 1900, and after 1900. The works are first reproduced in large clear color photographs and at the end of each section they are illustrated again in thumbnail format accompanied with brief but interesting commentaries. Unlike most museum catalogues, Galitz uses a cross cultural approach in arranging the works of art rather than by geographical location or national school. Throughout you will see works from different continents on the same page spreads. I found that the works were photographed beautifully, but unfortunately several of the Chinese and Japanese handscrolls were so long that only details could be highlighted.
